BUILDING THE FOUNDATION

What do Denver Broncos Hall of Fame Quarterback John Elway, rock star Mick Jagger, actor and 38th Governor of California, Arnold Schwarzenegger, and Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor all have in common? In addition to having very successful careers in a wide variety of occupations, all were undergraduate economics majors.

The USI Romain College of Business's excellent Economics faculty share their enthusiasm and build connections with students through many exciting and engaging opportunities, such as experiments in the Griffin Experimental Economics Laboratory, engaging classes, regional and international travel, projects through the Center for Economics Education, and many student club activities.

A degree in economics provides you with valuable competencies, combining analytical and communication skills, including:

- problem solving
- critical thinking
- strategic decision making
- analyzing human behavior

As a USI economics major, you gain experience before specializing in a career track or going on to graduate or professional school. Many economics majors go on to law school, pursue master's degrees in business administration, public administration and applied econometrics for those interested in data analytics.

WORLD CLASS OPPORTUNITIES

Griffin Experimental Economics Laboratory

At USI, Economics students can participate in fun experiments to study behavior in a wide range of social and business situations in the Griffin Experimental Economics Laboratory. USI is one of only three Universities in the state to offer an experimental economics laboratory.

Center for Economic Education

Students can actively participate in outreach projects sponsored by the Center for Economic Education. This is a tremendous opportunity to network, gain experience, and build your expertise by applying in the community what you learn in the classroom.

Economics Club

Members of the Economics Club attend ongoing Role Model speaker series sessions, sponsor networking events with other student clubs, and have the opportunity to be part of an annual Women in Economics Symposium.

Summer Program at the University of Applied Sciences in Osnabrück

Economics students can earn class credit and a priceless educational experience in Europe by taking part in the Romain College's summer program at the University of Applied Sciences in Osnabrück in Germany.

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

Everything has a business side, and economics graduates from the Romain College of Business are qualified to excel in all levels of today's complex business environments. You will have the critical skills that employers are looking for in these exciting careers:

- Federal Reserve System
- Government or International agencies
- Financial institutions
- Research to provide economic advice to policymakers
- Data analysis for insurance companies and healthcare
- Graduate studies

Being an Economics major also prepares you to succeed in many graduate degrees, such as a Juris Doctor, Master of Business Administration, and Ph.D. in Economics.

BEYOND THE CLASSROOM

Some of your most important learning experiences and networking opportunities can happen outside the classroom. Graduates consistently cite involvement in student organizations as catalysts for their careers.

Joining a student organization and/or honor society for economics majors allows you to collaborate and network across disciplines:

- Alpha Kappa Psi—a national co-ed professional business fraternity
- Economics Club
- Omicron Delta Epsilon—academic honor society for economics majors
- USI Speaking Eagles Toastmasters Distinguished club
